Educated in Philadelphia schools, graduating as a civil engineer from the Polytechnic College in 1870, and from the law department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1875. Studied law with Hon. Peter McCall and was admitted to the Philadelphia bar in October, 1874. After his admission to the bar he formed with Joseph Hopkinson, Esq., the law firm of Baird & Hopkinson, which partnership is still practicing law in the city and has represented many and varied interests. In the years 1888 and 1889 Mr. Baird held the position of chief of the law division of the Philadelphia Custom House and was appointed state clerk in the city treasurer's office in 1891. It was in his department and under his supervision that the laborious investigations were made that resulted in the arrest and indictment of the then mercantile appraisers of the city of Philadelphia and their pleas of guilty and dismissal from office by the court. On May 23, 1893, Mr. Baird was appointed by President Grover Cleveland assistant appraiser of merchandise for the district of Philadelphia, which position he held until April 1, 1896, when he was appointed by President Cleveland appraiser of merchandise for the said district in place of the former appraiser, who had resigned. Upon the appointment of Lynn Hartranft, Esq., on April 20, 1897, by President McKinley, Mr. Baird resumed the practice of his profession in this city. As a young man Mr. Baird took an active part in cricket, playing with the first eleven of the Young America Cricket Club of Germantown and forming one of the eleven which won the Halifax cup, as well as playing on several of the international matches. McCORMICK, MARGUERITE M. A biographical sketch of Marguerite M. McCormick need not be limited to a chronicle of births and marriages. Mrs. McCormick has done things. Above all, she has proven beyond a shadow of doubt that a woman can be equally successful in business and in caring for a home, for Mrs. McCormick does both—and well. The inscription, M. M. McCormick & Co., on the door of Room 510, Real Estate Trust Building, gives no indication that the executive head of that concern is a woman, but such is the case, for Marguerite M. McCormick is head of M. M. McCormick & Co. Mrs. McCormick has been active in the textile field for some time, both here and abroad. The firm she directs is a distributor of a number of commodities, including yarns, latch needles, soaps, oils, etc. The management of M. M. McCormick & Co. is such as to forever dispel the theory that business capability is a matter of sex. In person Mrs. McCormick is a denial of the truth of that time-worn argument that business robs woman of her femininity. She loves her work as a textile broker, but by no means has she lost the power to find rare pleasure in preparing a delectable meal. Mrs. McCormick has had some success as a newspaper writer. Welfare work is her favorite form of recreation.

The Abram Cox Stove Company

THE ABRAM COX STOVE COMPANY. At the time this country entered the War, in April, 1917, the Abram Cox Stove Company was engaged in producing the well-known Novelty line of boilers, furnaces, ranges and stoves, and Fortune gas ranges and gas water heaters, the only product this company had manufactured since it was established in 1847. In a very short time after the declaration of war it was realized that this company must adjust its production to do all possible toward accomplishing the one purpose then interesting every American: "To win the war."

The first step in this direction was the supplying of room heaters to the various cantonments, in the early Fall of 1917. Then heaters were used to heat the various cantonment buildings and were used in large numbers. They provided ample healthful heat for the "boys." All goods ordered by the Government for this purpose were manufactured and shipped on the dates specified by the Government.

At the same time their manufacturing department made a careful survey of the plants and equipment to ascertain what portion could be utilized in producing war material, should it be required. Upon the completion of the survey it was decided to devote all of the plant and equipment possible to Government work.

The Abram Cox Stove Company, Philadelphia Plant

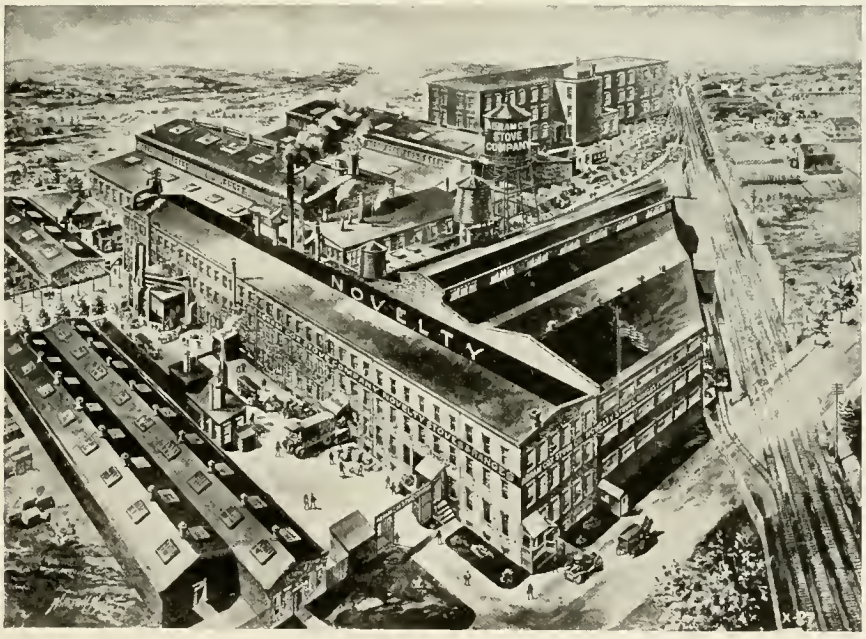
The two plants of the Abram Cox Stove Company consist of the Philadelphia plant, which is a five-story building, covering the block bounded by American, Dauphin, York and Phillip Streets, with a siding from the Philadelphia and Reading Railway, and the plant at Lansdale, Pa., consisting of nine buildings, situated on the Bethlehem division of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway, covering a plot of ground approximately 500 feet along the railroad and 400 feet deep, all equipped with the latest foundry and shop methods to produce a strictly high-grade product. The combined plants have a floor space of a half million square feet and a capacity of one hundred tons of castings per day.

Shortly after supplying the room heaters to the cantonments, they received orders for supplying furnaces and ranges in the homes then in course of construction by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and practically all of these homes in this locality and the surrounding section are equipped with "Novelty" apparatus. At the same time many hundreds of heating stoves were being shipped to various shipyards, munitions and ordnance plants in various sections of the country, all deliveries being made on the dates specified by the Government. To further assist the Government in securing the supplies required for war work, they arranged, in conjunction with their customers, to only supply their heating appliances where absolutely required, in order to devote as much of their equipment as possible to Government requirements.

The Abram Cox Stove Company

At about this time they began to receive orders from various shipyards for castings for ship parts, from anchor works, for chain dies, castings to be used in ordnance buildings, parts for nautical instruments, equipment for powder mills, orders from other shipyards for torpedo-boat fittings, all of which were delivered on or prior to specified dates. Various other manufacturers, having heard of the excellent quality of their castings, sent them orders for machinery to punch ship plates, parts for nitrate plants, castings to repair Government automobile trucks, ordnance machinery, airplane parts; in fact, practically every branch of war work requiring gray iron castings was represented in the orders they received. In the way of assisting in producing foodstuffs, Abram Cox Stove Company supplied castings to several manufacturers of agricultural machinery.

By the early part of 1918, practically the whole of their Lansdale plant and the greater portion of the Philadelphia plant were devoted to helping win the war.. They also furnished many thousand airplane marker bombs for a large local concern, where they were machined and furnished for army ordnance. One of the orders received was for a number of ethyline tubes to be used by one of the arsenals for making "mustard gas." These tubes weigh about fourteen hundred pounds and are nearly ten feet long, about fourteen inches in diameter and one inch thick. In order that they would properly perform the work required of them, it was necessary that the castings should be free from all flaws and defects. After carefully testing the iron used in the work, the arsenal officers awarded them the order for these castings. In exactly one week after receipt of the order, they had made pattern core boxes, necessary flasks and produced several castings of a piece that it was thought could not be produced in a very much longer time.

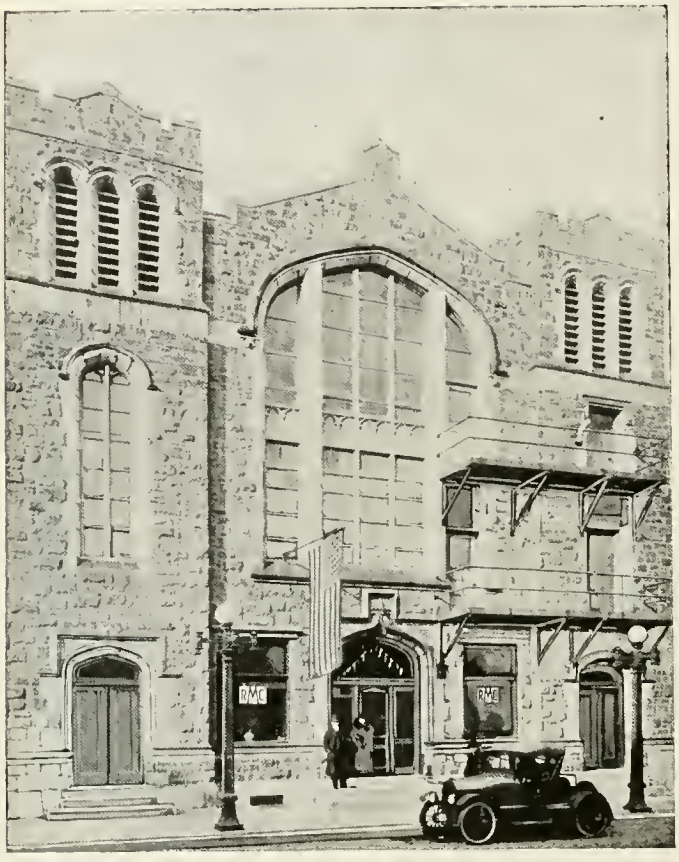


The Abram Cox Stove Company, Lansdale Plant

The Abram Cox Stove Company also were successful in locating a machine shop with an available lathe large enough to machine the flanges of the tubes, which measured twenty-two inches in diameter, and rearranged their shape to accommodate this casting. These tubes were well under way when the signing of the armistice made it unnecessary to complete the work. One other line of war activity, which was also brought to a finish before the completion by the signing of the armistice, was the preparation to produce Newton-Stokes trench mortar shells in large quantities. Much time and effort had been spent and a very considerable amount of expense incurred by this company in devising and perfecting a method of producing these shells rapidly and accurately, and experiments proved the method a success, but the termination of the war made further work in this line unnecessary.

Now that the war is won, it must indeed be gratifying to this big stove concern to look back over the period in which they were doing every possible thing to help win the war, overcoming what appeared to be insurmountable difficulties, that the boys at the front could have the full, whole-hearted support of those who were charged with the responsibility of supplying them the necessary munitions and supplies, that they might again prove to the world that the United States never enters a war until forced to do so, and always wins. (This article is accurate in every respect, having been attested by the Ordnance Department to which it was submitted.)

The Richard's Manufacturing Corporation



The Richard's Manufacturing Corp'n Building

WM. W. RICHARDS, President and Treasurer
GROVER C. RICHARDS, Vice President.
MARTIN L. STAHL, Secretary.

About April 1, 1917, a representative of the Quartermaster Department, Philadelphia Depot, called on the Richards Manufacturing Corporation and asked if they were prepared to make tents and equipment for the War Department. They told him their place was too small (at that time located at Fourth and Callowhill Streets) and did not think they could handle any large tents. He suggested that they could make small wall tents and flies and advised them to take a small contract, as it was their patriotic duty to do so in case of war.

Mr. Grover C. Richards, Vice President, called on Colonel Hirsh, Purchasing Officer of the Schuylkill Arsenal, Philadelphia, and received a contract for 3000 wall tent flies, he requesting them to hurry this contract along and see how quickly they could make deliveries. Though badly handicapped by not having a factory that was properly equipped with elevators and facilities for receiving and delivering material, the contract was finished ahead of the specified time.

The next contract was for 6000 small wall tent flies. This contract was finished and delivered ahead of time.

The third contract, for 7000 wall tent flies, was delivered on time, though there were delays owing to having to wait for material, as the Government could not supply them with the duck as fast as needed.

A small contract for 500 storage tent flies, received in February, 1918, was delivered on time.

The next contract was for 2500 latrine screens. Some difficulty was experienced with this work, as the screens were 55 feet long and the workrooms were only 50 feet long, but a way out was found and the work finished on time, which was about June 1, 1918.

By this time, June, 1918, they had secured larger quarters, at 948-952 North Eighth Street. Here they fitted up a large factory, where larger contracts could be handled more efficiently. The building has three floors and a basement 55 feet wide and 85 feet long.

With this greatly increased capacity, a contract was received for 1000 large paulins from the War Department, July, 1918. These paulins were made of very heavy duck, and their size made them very hard to handle. Labor was scare, and applicants for work demanded very high wages. The goods supplied were not of the proper width and had to be cut and bited on every cloth. The government was short of this material and could only supply it in small amounts. However, all but two of the paulins were completed at the time the armistice was signed and the contract cancelled by the Government.

About September 1, 1918, a contract was received from the Marine Corps for 6000 wall tents. They wanted a contractor to do this work who had a large factory where he could store the material. The Richards Manufacturing Corporation had the space, and all of the material for this contract (about 300,000 yards of 12-ounce khaki duck) was stored here. It was found necessary to put in extra machinery to take care of this work, as the contract was to be finished by February 22. Government wages were paid on all previous contracts. It was decided to try the piecework system on this contract. They found that plan the better, as the operators did more work and made larger wages than when working by the per diem scale. In order to further increase the production they decided to pay a bonus. This plan was a success, as all workers managed to produce enough to get the bonus. Labor troubles developed, owing to the foreman having to reprove a few of the workers for doing careless work, and when the contract was almost finished these careless workers induced a number of the operators to strike, demanding that the foreman be discharged. The foreman, however, was retained and other workers put in the place of those who had gone out on strike. This caused delay, and the contract was not completed until about a week after the specified time. The Government was considerate and seemed to realize their position and granted an extension of two weeks' time for the completion of this contract. This was the last contract for the Government.

Since completing this contract this firm has continued to make tents, tarpaulins, wagon, automobile and truck covers, horse covers, moving covers, covers for all kinds of machinery, furniture pads, bags of all description and canvas specialties such as carpenters' nail pockets, mechanics' aprons and tool rolls.

Chester Steel Castings Co.

CHESTER, PENNA.

During the world war and after our entrance into same in April, 1917, the efforts of the Chester Steel Castings Company, of Chester, Pa., were devoted entirely to supplying manufacturers throughout the country with steel castings to be used in the construction of railroad work and various kinds of machinery, all entering into the production of work in turn for the Government. The Chester Steel Castings Company furnished during the war the water-space frames for all the locomotives built in the district. An enormous undertaking, when it is remembered that the work required turning the water-space frames out on a quantity basis; many were the difficulties to be overcome to meet the schedule—twenty frames per day. Their furnaces were equipped for melting by gas; due to the great shortage of coal, they found it would be impossible for them to run under such conditions. Therefore, they immediately made a turnover from gas to oil, and in order to insure a sufficient amount of oil on hand to meet the government's requirements, it was necessary to construct four concrete tanks, with a capacity of 35,000 gallons each for storage purposes. After this was accomplished, they again turned their efforts along the lines of production and furnished the Government and our Allies with sufficient castings to construct engines for France and Great Britain at the rate of twenty frames per day, including many miscellaneous parts. Their next step along these lines was to supply the Government with 1500 frames to be used in the construction of Pershing engines to move supplies from France to our army and our Allies. The Chester Steel Castings Company was requested to produce these frames at the rate of ten per day, which they did. In addition to this, and at the same time, they produced frames to be used in the construction of gasoline engines for France, making a total production of frames of twenty per day. About this time they were called upon by the Ordnance Department to help out in the production of recoil bands, sleeves, trunnions, counterweights and miscellaneous castings to be used in the construction of guns ranging in size from eight inches to fourteen inches, and they kept on producing this class of work until the armistice was signed. There seems to be an idea very prevalent in this country that all large builders of machinery turned out machines complete themselves; this idea is erroneous, as many parts have to be bought elsewhere, and, after all, builders of very large machinery and equipment are often assembling shops only and without the support of the industry as a whole it would not have been a physical possibility to have accomplished the great production in most of the lines. During this period the Company and its management did their utmost to work together with their employees, having in mind at all times the building up of production for the welfare and contentment of the men. During the latter part of September, 1918, they were again called upon by the Government to furnish trunnion castings to be used in the construction of 14-inch guns. These castings weigh approximately 35,000 pounds each. It is a matter of record that they turned out castings faster than any other plants could machine them. They were at all times ahead of their schedule. The Chester Steel Castings Company also furnished several large castings to be used in the construction of hydraulic presses to be used in turning out the forgings. After the shipping program was under way, they were called upon to give assistance along entirely different lines, necessitating another turn-over. They started to manufacture castings to be used by the various shipyards of this country, stern frames, rudder frames, propeller wheels, anchors and miscellaneous castings for ship construction. When the armistice was signed the company had orders, direct or indirect, for the Government, which would have required about one year to produce, about equally divided between the Ordnance Department, shipyards and locomotive builders.

HERBERT BROTHERS

WILLIAM P. HERBERT, President
WALTER G. HERBERT, Vice-President, Treasurer and General Manager

HERBERT BROTHERS BUILDING

With the exception of a scattered few small business houses and a number of public institutions, nearly a score of blocks of Broad Street, the great central business and travel artery, north and south in Philadelphia, is occupied with the trade of passenger and commercial motor cars and their associate lines; but there is not a more notably successful house in "The Row" than the subject of this editorial sketch.

The products of Chandler Motor Car Company and Cleveland Motor Car Company, Cleveland, Ohio, are merchandised in Philadelphia territory by the highly-developed organization known as Herbert Brothers, which is the focal point of a business extending through a radius of about 150 miles and embracing the efforts, salesrooms and service plants in more than 125 populous localities in eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland and parts of Virginia, actually vitalizing the Herbert slogan: "Dealers and Instant Service Everywhere."

This substantial business was the vision of the president, W. P. Herbert, who, in 1914, organized the Chandler Motor Car Company of Philadelphia for the purpose of wholesaling the Chandler car in the great territory assigned to him by the Chandler Company at the beginning of its manufacturing. The offices of the Herbert Company were located in the Land Title and Trust Building, corner of Broad and Chestnut Streets. The business grew rapidly from the first days and soon compelled removal to larger quarters. The site chosen was the building in which the company is now housing the Cleveland car, the northeast corner of Broad and Race Streets.

Here the company found a new name along with a new location. This was in 1915, and the corporation was chartered as W. P. Herbert Company. A retail department was opened on the first floor of the Abbott Building. This new business prospered famously and the Chandler car was seen everywhere. Mr. W. P. Herbert, the president, became an officer and one of the pillars of the Automobile Trade Association and a big figure in the trade generally, as his car loomed among the most popular vehicles on the market.

1916 found the business shaping toward gigantic proportions, and the executive branch was again recast, the new corporation then being known as Herbert-Cook Company. The second name was that of Ralph W. Cook also well known in the local automobile trade. The company's offices were continued at Broad and Race Streets with a service station at 1534 to 1540 Wood Street.

1917 Mr. Cook entered the United States Army as a volunteer for service in the World War, and the company's name was again changed, the corporate title being that of today, Herbert Brothers, with William P. Herbert, president; Walter G. Herbert, vice president, treasurer and general manager; F. Raymond Deichler, secretary. Under this management the business has taxed to the utmost every space and facility that has been provided to care for its daily increase. At the beginning of 1919 the company took over the adjoining building, the six-story concrete building, Nos. 203 and 205 North Broad Street, which, inclusive of the original location at Broad and Race Streets, is one of the largest and most complete establishments in America devoted exclusively to the sale of new motor cars. The big plant for service at 1534-40 Wood Street was retained and amplified both as to equipment and men.

1919 was also made a notable Herbert year by the coming of the Cleveland car, which was put on the market early in the spring, after exhaustive laboratory and road tests. The Cleveland was handled so successfully that its success was almost instantaneous, while its daily gain in popularity has been unprecedented in this very conservative territory. This car is also a six, and its makers have closely followed the Chandler policy of giving wonderful intrinsic value, increasing passenger comfort and lightening weight, along with maintenance of their recognized policy of low price.

To be a Herbert Brothers' dealer requires maintenance of high standards of business, ample stock, complete equipment and a familiarity with cars that insure the "instant service" of the Herbert slogan. Included in the roster of the Herbert connections are the most successful and prosperous merchants in the big towns and important trade centers in the several states this company covers for Chandler and Cleveland. These dealers and their men are all substantial citizens, who meet their civic obligations with both intelligence and good cheer. In the Philadelphia house alone there were thirty-two enrollments in Army service; thirty-two stars on the service flag—and a number of the company's employes were members of the Loan Committees, while the organization as a whole went "over the top" with 100 per cent at each loan drive.

The work of such an organization as that of Herbert Brothers, in covering such a large territory as the most populous portion of Pennsylvania, and the great touring roads of the better part of four other states, is a great task. Thousands of cars—Cleveland and Chandler—are sold, delivered and kept sold every year. Thousands of other makes are repaired, restored or equipped with modern devices for safer driving or more comfortable riding; publicity is given every question that affects the interests or rights of owners; aids provided for tourists; helps in enforcing or maintaining useful motor laws; good road conditions are promoted. Such an organization is a public institution and a general benefaction, rather than solely a commercial enterprise with profit and personal ambition in view. Every man that travels by car is a debtor to the men whose energy and executive ability put together such forces and have that strength of will and winning personality that forms the cohesive element to hold them in place.

THE ASSOCIATED BROKERS

ANYTHING IN INSURANCE

1709 CHESTNUT STREET

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WE solicit an opportunity of advising with you as to your insurance contracts or of placing your insurance. We are licensed brokers. We necessarily make a study of different forms of policies and the reputation, strength and fairness of the companies who write them. Our services cost you nothing. The broker receives a commission from the companies with whom he places business, and as all companies recognize the broker (who is licensed by the State) and pay him a commission, it is a matter of small financial interest to the broker, with what particular company the risk is placed. He is consequently in a position, without undue financial bias, to impartially advise his client. Since insurance, in its various policy provisions, the responsibility and fairness of the different companies, is quite technical, and since insurance brokerage is now recognized as a profession, this advice is frequently quite essential to the insured. Our advice and co-operation (without any cost to you) are at your service.

The Franklin National Bank, whose handsome new building is one of the most attractive banking homes of the city, has had a rapid and consistent growth since its organization in 1900.

Beginning with a capital of $1,000,000 and surplus of $1,000,000, it has, within the period of twenty years, added to its earnings until, with capital unchanged, its surplus and undivided profits amount to $5,104,000 In that time its deposits also have grown to the noteworthy figure of over $60,000,000.

Its remarkable growth is due to a vigorous and broad-visioned management ably supported by an active board of directors, composed of men who represent the most successful and progressive of the city's business interests.

The Franklin National Bank is noted throughout the country for its splendid progress and its broad and aggressive policy.

The Bank of North America

305-09 Chestnut Street

Philadelphia

The oldest bank in the United States, and one of the most substantial. Chartered by Congress in 1781, and has continued ever since (although it is now a National Bank) under the same name. A detailed history of the Bank would be very nearly an epitome of the financial history of the country.

Nowadays the wide-awake business man needs a bank that is more than simply a place to deposit and pay out money.

He wants

1—A bank that can be depended upon in tight or easy money markets—

2—Prompt collection of outside items, checks, drafts, notes—

3—Modern safe deposit vault—

4—Alive credit information—

5—Worth-while checking of investments—

6—Foreign service including commercial as well as banking—

7—A business man's library for the study of foreign trade and business systems and management—

8—Advice as to what improved methods of conducting business are being used elsewhere—

9—The advice of expert engineers as to the proper development of manufacturing methods—

10—A trust department constantly working in close co-operation with its customers with the result that a customer knows his affairs will continue to be well administered.

In short, the up-to-date business man wants a business-building and a business-protecting Bank.

Our position in the city's business life is no over-night achievement. We have been many years building the organization that makes the Corn Exchange the choice of so many successful business men.

interested in the filtration and purification of water, and contributed a number of valuable inventions to this end which are now largely used throughout the world. For a time was president of the Bethlehem City Water Company, the Philadelphia and Bristol Water Company and other water supply concerns. About three years ago he associated himself with Dr. E. D. Dier, and the Stock Exchange firm of Hughes & Dier was formed and established at 1435 Walnut street, occupying the entire building. Has been for many years past affiliated with the Young Republicans of Philadelphia, the noted organization formed by Edwin S. Stuart and others, and was at one time its president. In the Bryan free silver campaign Mr. Hughes' pamphlet, "A Dishonest Ratio," was spread broadcast by the Republican National Committee. He has contributed many other pamphlets to the cause of Republicanism during the various campaigns. Prior to the Spanish-American War was captain of the Second Troop of Phila-

Frontier Press Company. Came to Philadelphia as branch manager, March 15, 1911. On the belief that people want accurate, up-to-date information, and want it quickly, the Standard Dictionary of Facts was built. The Home Study Outlines is a self-educator system for that great army who have not obtained a liberal education when in school. Mr. Brennan has built this business from desk room to the largest business of its kind in the city, on the theory that if it is good to compile educational books, to publish them or to use them, it is also good to sell them. He maintains that this educational process is true salesmanship. In his school of salesmanship, 500 Drexel Building, he trains former school teachers, principals, superintendents and other competent people how to interview the public with these educational publications, as he himself would desire to be interviewed if the conditions were reversed. As a consequence, Mr. Brennan's business has increased more than 30 per cent a year for eight years, and in 1919 he doubled his business of 1918. The Frontier Press Company is now working toward the end of its second million sales on the Standard Dictionary of Facts, and they have just begun. Mr. Brennan believes he has proven conclusively that any real competent school teacher can, with training, become a truly successful sales person; that the public welcomes a real sales person, one who sells goods to the end of satisfaction of both buyer and seller; that the high-grade educational books sold by trained salespeople are of much more value to the customer than the same article purchased from an order taker; that a splendid service can be rendered by placing a few million educational books into the homes of the American families and helping to develop the study habit in the home; and, finally, that the science of business is the science of service; he profits most who serves best. Catholic; Independent. Recreations, motoring, gardening, student of sociology, physchology, art and music. Member Board of Trade, Knights of Columbus, American Academy of Political and Social Science. Instructor in salesmanship at Drexel Institute. Residence, 40 Linwood Ave., Ardmore, Pa. Business address, 500 Drexel Bldg., Phila., Pa.

IHLDER JOHN

United States and Canada. When the European war broke out he was in England where he had taken a party of sixteen American housing workers to study what had been accomplished through governmental agencies and by private initiative in London, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester and other cities and in the garden suburbs and villages. After graduating from Cornell he spent a year on the New York Evening Sun, then went to Europe for a year to study social and economic conditions. Upon his return he became an editor of the New International Encyclopaedia. In 1903 he went to Grand Rapids, Michigan, as editorial writer on the Evening Press, and while there became so much interested in civic affairs that he left newspaper work to become secretary of the Municipal Affairs Committee, which secured one of the first city plans in America. It was through his city planning work that he was led to study housing, and when a few months after the organization of the National Housing Association he was invited to become its field secretary, he moved back to New York. He held this position until January, 1916, when he resigned in order to devote more time to the construction and management side of the work and to the making of housing surveys, several of which he had supervised during the preceding years. In January, 1917, Mr. Ihlder became secretary of the Philadelphia Housing Association and in January, 1918, he became managing director of the Child Federation. During 1918 he was the Philadelphia representative of the United States Housing Corporation and chairman of the U. S. Homes Registration Service. The virtual cessation of all private construction when the United States entered the war soon produced so great a house shortage and such insanitary conditions in the Philadelphia district, which had become the nation's greatest center for shipbuilding and the manufacture of munitions, as to threaten a serious lowering of production. The Housing Association was the first to call attention to this situation. It held conferences of builders, manufacturers and federal officials, made investigations at the instance of federal departments and carried on a constant campaign in congress. After months of delay, congress enacted legislation creating the U. S. Housing Corporation and authorizing it and the Emergency Fleet Corporation to build dwellings. More than half of the appropriations for this purpose were spent in the Philadelphia district, and had a marked influence in maintaining the morale of the workers. The Child Federation, at the request of the Pennsylvania Council of National Defense, organized a child welfare committee composed of representatives of social agencies whose work affects children. Through this committee the various agencies formulated plans of co-operation which greatly increased the effectiveness of their work and made possible the remarkable co-ordination of effort at the time of the influenza epidemic in the fall of 1918. After the armistice this committee was reorganized as the social and health committee and its scope widened to include plans for co-ordinating the work of all social and health agencies of the city. When this work had been well established Mr. Ihlder resigned from the Child Federation so that he might concentrate his efforts on housing. Republican. Unitarian. Recreations, sailing, swimming,

APPENDIX

¶ The war, loan drives, war chest drives, labor troubles, advancing prices, and many other difficulties were encountered in the compilation and publication of this work. The labor of more than a score of people, over a long period of time was required in our own organization alone.

¶ The work is a record of a time of stress and storm and bears within itself the marks of travail. Many of those who should be included in its pages were in foreign service or inaccessible; but these will, we hope, be included in a companion volume (Who's Who in Philadelphia Volume II, Keystone State Notable Series) which is now under way.

¶ The typographic excellence of this work is due to the Gelman Printing House—its printers—and it would tax the resources of any printing plant in the country to surpass it, or to equal it.

¶ The engravings were made largely by the Franklin Photo Engraving House, with some examples of the work of the Photo Chromotype Engraving Company.

¶ A large number of the photographs were from the Marceau Studios, others were from the Photo-Crafters, Phillips, William Shewell Ellis, the Washington Studios, Gutekunst, Lipp, Goldensky, and in fact nearly every photographer of prominence in the city.

¶ The publishers take this opportunity to express their gratitude and appreciation to those included in this volume for their patronage and co-operation, which made this work possible.
